Introduction

This second edition of the PULP Guide: Where to publish articles on the law contains information on a number of accredited journals of potential interest to lawyers and legal academics and which generate subsidy for South African universities from the Department of Education (DoE) upon the publication of articles in these journals by staff and students. For the greater part, only English language journals are covered.

The first edition of this Guide was published in 2007, and was well received by legal academics throughout the country. This second edition of the Guide has been updated and information on the impact of the different journals has been added.

The accreditation system of academic journals in South Africa may be summarised as follows: Three accreditation systems are used by the DoE to determine which journals are subsidised. These systems are the DoE’s own internal accreditation system for South African journals, and two international systems: the International Science Index (ISI) and the International Bibliography of Social Sciences (IBSS). (See Policy for Measurement of Research Output of Public Higher Education Institutions of the DoE available at http://www.education.gov.za/Documents/policies/policies.asp.)

A complete list of all journals accredited under each of these systems can also be obtained at http://www.library.up.ac.za/journals/journals_accredited.htm and at http://www.education.gov.za (click on ‘Documents’ and then ‘Publications’).

The ISI forms part of Thomson Scientific, a for-profit corporation specialising in information and database solutions. The ISI master journal list consists of over 14 000 journals. However, the DoE does not subsidise publications in all journals accredited to the ISI. Only the three Web of Science Indexes that are part of the ISI are recognised, viz Science Citation Index Expanded, Social Sciences Citation Index and Arts & Humanities Citation Index. Further information on the ISI can be obtained at http://scientific.thomson.com/index.html.

All journals accredited to the IBSS are recognised and subsidised by the DoE. The IBSS was established in 1951 under the auspices of the International Committee for Social Science Information and Documentation. The IBSS was established to promote and facilitate the free flow internationally of scholarly social science information. More information on the IBSS can be obtained at http://www.lse.ac.uk/collections/IBSS.

For the purpose of this publication, we went through the DoE, ISI and IBSS lists of accredited journals, and selected those titles which to us appear to be of potential interest to legal academics. The indexes with which each journal is accredited, are indicated in brackets after the website address of the journal. While all the journals listed here are DoE accredited, there may be other DoE accredited journals of interest to legal academics, such as non-law journals that are not covered here.
While every caution has been taken to obtain up-to-date and accurate information, researchers are nevertheless advised, before finally submitting an article to a journal, to consult the latest information available on the relevant websites provided above.

The bulk of the research for the first edition of this publication was undertaken by Gus Waschefort. Shirley Gilmore updated the information for the second edition and did the research on the impact factors. Annelize Nienaber provided editorial assistance. Where available, information about the various journals was sourced directly from their websites and/or editorial pages, and consequently the entries in this Guide do not necessarily reflect the outcome of an independent investigation on our side.

This publication, with live links to the websites of the respective journals, is also available on the website of the Pretoria University Law Press (PULP): http://www.pulp.up.ac.za. For comments or corrections for future editions of this Guide, please contact Lizette Besaans via email: pulp@up.ac.za.

Information on impact factors

It is increasingly important for researchers to know whether or not their research reaches the intended audience, and whether their peers engage with their research findings. In this context it could be useful to be able to compare the so-called impact factors of the different journals that a researcher considers when deciding where to submit his or her article for publication. If there are many references or citations to an article then it may be said that the impact of that article is high and it will have a correspondingly high ‘impact factor’. Such figures are also available for the journals themselves. This edition of the PULP Guide endeavours to make this information readily available to researchers.

Information on the impact factors of the different journals, where available, is given in tabular form after each journal title entry. The figures reflect the situation in September 2008. If there is no information it means that none is available.

There are two main systems that attempt to provide some measurement of the impact of journals listed in this Guide, the ISI system and the Washington and Lee School system.

1. International Science Index - ISI
   (See http://www.isiknowledge.com/)

   The International Science Index (ISI) provides information on the impact of the articles and journals. Only 100 law journals are considered for the index. The information is found in the ‘Journal Citation Reports’ (JCR) of ISI.

   The tables provided in the Guide contain the following information:

   - Impact factor: The average number of times articles from the journal published in the past two years have been cited in the JCR year.
   - Total cites: The total number of times that a journal has been cited by all journals included in the database in the JCR year.
   - Each JCR year contains one year of citation data.

2. Washington and Lee Law School, Law Journals: Submissions and Ranking
   (See http://lawlib.wlu.edu/LJ/index.aspx)

   A total of 1445 journal titles are included in the database.

   The tables provided in the Guide contain the following information:

   - Impact 00-07: Impact-factor is the median of the annual number of citations to a journal divided by the number of the items published by that journal, during that year and during each year back to the beginning of the survey period.
   - Total cites 00-07: Citations from journal articles: The total cites to the journal over an eight year period from journal articles. The journals used are those found in the full-text Westlaw journals database.
   - Combined-score ranking: The combined-score is a composite of each journal’s impact-factor and total cites count.

   The impact factor information will be presented in this Guide in the following format. Please note that not all journals have impact factors.

Presentation of information

The information on the journals is presented as follows:

- Full title of the journal. Journals are alphabetically arranged.
- ISSN — International Standard Serials Number — which is a unique number for each title.
- URL for that title — where available.
- The journal list in which the title is found, for example DoE (Department of Education accredited list); ISI (International Science Index list of law journals) and IBSS (International Bibliography of Social Sciences list). Some titles may be found in more than one list.
- Open access — this implies that everyone has free, online access to the full-text articles of this title. Simply go to the URL to obtain such access.
- Some general information on the title.
- The impact factor information

The Columbia Journal of European Law (CJEL) is published under the auspices of the European Legal Studies Center at the Columbia University School of Law (New York), in cooperation with the Institute for European Law of the Katholieke Universiteit in Leuven, Belgium. It is intended primarily to respond to the growth of interest in European law among Americans. While giving priority to the analysis of legal documents at the European Community and European Union level, CJEL actively encourages contributions exploring any dimension of European law, including those at the national or regional levels, as well as those relevant to broader questions on the development of law and legal institutions in Europe as a whole. CJEL further seeks to present articles — whether authored by Americans, Europeans or scholars from other parts of the world — that bring special comparative, historical and political perspectives to bear on the issues under discussion. The range of subject areas covered by CJEL is extremely diverse, ranging from human rights to corporate law.

56. European Journal of Crime, Criminal Law and Criminal Justice
ISSN 0928-9569
http://www.brill.nl/eccl
(IBSS); Open access: no

Crime, criminal law and criminal justice are more than ever on the political agenda of the European institutions, above all the European Union and the Council of Europe. This is not only because of the increasingly vehement debate on transnational crime problems in the individual member states, but also as a consequence of the widening of the European Union and the drafting of an European Constitution, and last but not least because of the threat of terrorism. This journal is meant to be a European forum for the public academic debate on these issues that not only bridges the gap between the European institutions and the member states, but that is also open for a non-European view on European developments in those fields. Its aim is to offer an international and comparative perspective on crime, criminal law and criminal justice in Europe.

Published by John Hopkins University Press, the Human Rights Quarterly is widely recognised as the leader in the field of human rights. Articles written by experts from around the world and from a range of disciplines are edited to be understood by the intelligent reader. The Quarterly provides up-to-date information on important developments within the United Nations and regional human rights organisations, both governmental and non-governmental. It presents current work in human rights research and policy analysis, reviews of related books, and philosophical essays probing the fundamental nature of human rights as defined by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. By providing decision makers with insight into complex human rights issues, the Quarterly helps to define national and international human rights policy.

Human Rights Review provides a forum in which human rights issues and their underlying theoretical and/or philosophical foundations are developed and debated. It has become increasingly clear that the interminable urgency that surrounds critical human rights issues today cannot reasonably be separated from the need for a more careful theoretical clarification of fundamental concepts that ground those issues. The journal publishes articles and essays from all academic areas, essays that provide theoretical, historical, and empirical analyses of human rights concerns, papers that address the moral and political interpretation and application of human rights legislation in the international community, questions regarding terrorism, genocide and human security, issues related to sovereignty, globalisation, cultural diversity, gender, human rights dilemmas in health care and economic development, and any of the other many human rights-related issues that concern, or ought to concern, the world today. Human Rights Review is a fully refereed journal.

International & Comparative Law Quarterly (ICLQ) publishes papers on public and private international law and also comparative law. It has maintained its pre-eminence as one of the earliest and most important journals of its kind, encompassing human rights and European law. The journal encourages innovative and original articles that explore the interconnectedness between the legal subject areas, moving across the boundaries that divide the law in a way that provides vital analysis at a time when formal distinctions, in scholarship and between jurisdictions, are becoming less relevant. The ICLQ attracts scholarship of the highest standard from around the world, which contributes to the maintenance of its truly international frame of reference.

The International Journal of Law, Crime and Justice (formerly the International Journal of the Sociology of Law — IJSL) is to be an interdisciplinary forum for research and debate in legal studies and criminology. With the globalisation of crime and risk, and the internationalisation of law and law-enforcement processes and machineries, new challenges are presented to the distribution of justice, the maintenance of human rights and the governance of justice and security. Partly as a reflection of this, scholarly activity in the fields of socio-legal studies and criminology has expanded exponentially in recent years, both in terms of nation-based research and comparative studies.

In the past two decades, countries emerging from divided histories have increasingly incorporated transitional justice mechanisms in order to uncover and deal with crimes of the past. The International Journal of Transitional Justice aims to provide a forum for developing and sharing knowledge and for building and consolidating research expertise in this vital field of study. Most importantly, IJTJ serves as both a vehicle for this information and as a point of dialogue between activists, practitioners and academics. This dialogue is promoted by the format and structure of the journal. In addition to regular length articles, the journal has a section entitled ‘Notes from the Field’ which carries shorter practitioner focused articles, interviews, discussion papers, responses to earlier articles, practitioners’ reflections, creative writing and the presentation of new data.

The Journal examines the relationship between the separate and interconnected regional and global integration processes stemming from today’s challenging multilateral trading structure. The operation of the North American Free Trade Agreement, the expansion of the European integration process, and especially the ongoing development of the World Trade Organization have each raised complex questions that cut across many disciplines: economic, political, social and legal. The journal focuses on multilateral, regional, and bilateral trade negotiations, on various anti-dumping and unfair trade practices issues, and on the endless succession of vital new issues that arise constantly in this turbulent field of activity. The approach is consistently multidisciplinary.

The Justice System Journal invites submission of articles and notes about courts and court administration that are likely to be of interest to practitioners and researchers in the field of judicial administration, broadly defined. Articles may draw on a variety of research approaches in the social sciences. Manuscripts should not exceed 45 total pages, which include end material (appendixes, notes, references, tables, and figures). Short articles written by practitioners or researchers that describe management innovations in court systems as well as short manuscripts analysing cases or legal issues of particular relevance to judicial administration are welcome. The Journal does not publish articles devoted to extended analysis of legal doctrine.

Law and Philosophy serves as a forum for the publication of work in law and philosophy that is of common interest to individuals in the disciplines of jurisprudence and legal philosophy. The journal publishes articles that use all approaches in both fields. In addition, it publishes work in any of the major legal traditions, including common law, civil law, and the socialist tradition. The editors of Law and Philosophy encourage papers that exhibit a philosophical reflection on the law and that are also informed by a solid knowledge of the law. Moreover, they encourage legal analysis informed by sound philosophical methods and principles.

The Legislative Studies Quarterly is an international journal devoted to the publication of research on representative assemblies. Its purpose is to disseminate scholarly work on parliaments and legislatures, their relations to other political institutions, their functions in the political system, and the activities of their members both within the institution and outside. Contributions are invited from scholars in all countries. The pages of the Quarterly are open to all research approaches consistent with the normal canons of scholarship, and to work on representative assemblies in all settings and all time periods. The aim of the journal is to contribute to the formulation and verification of general theories about legislative systems, processes, and behaviour. The editors encourage contributors to emphasise the cross-national implications of their findings, even if these findings are based on research within a single country. The Legislative Studies Quarterly is the official journal of the Legislative Studies Section of the American Political Science Association.

The Maastricht Journal of European and Comparative Law provides literature which enables both the European professional and academic lawyer to grapple with the special difficulties presented by the concept of ius commune Europaeum. The Maastricht Journal gives a deeper understanding of the extent to which there are common strands in law shared by the countries of Europe. The Journal is not, however, a battle horse in the fight for legal uniformity, but a forum in which reflection and dialogue can take place about the new legal pluralism in Europe, its new unity, and the strong elements of diversity which remain.

Established in 1927, the Southern California Law Review is an independent and autonomous entity. Matters of policy, procedure and content are determined solely by the Editorial Board. All decision making authority is delegated by the Dean of the law school to the Editor-in-Chief. The EIC, in turn, delegates various responsibilities to the Editorial Board and the Staff. Each year the Law Review publishes one volume, which is produced in six separate issues. Each issue normally contains several articles written by outside contributors and several notes written by Southern California Law Review staff members. The Law Review strives to publish articles on a wide range of topics and to serve all segments of the legal community.

ISSN 0042-6601
http://www.virginialawreview.org
(ISI): Open access: yes

In 2005, the Virginia Law Review entered its 91st academic year as a respected student legal periodical. Its objective is to publish a professional periodical devoted to law-related issues. The Virginia Law Review is published eight times per year. A typical issue includes two Articles, a Note, and an Essay or Book Review. Once a year, an issue may be devoted to a single legal problem or issue — often generated by a symposium. Most pieces are devoted to exclusively legal topics, though the Law Review occasionally publishes articles on inter-related topics of more general legal concern. Most pieces are devoted to exclusively legal topics, though the Law Review occasionally publishes articles on interrelated topics of more general legal concern, ranging from economics to psychology to urban policy. Nevertheless, the Law Review remains, first and foremost, a technical legal journal, with a focus on legal reasoning. The Virginia Law Review places a premium on accuracy in all respects — in propositions of law, points of grammar and usage, forms of citation, and analytical reasoning.

The Washington Law Review is a student-run legal journal at the University of Washington School of Law. Inaugurated in 1919, it is the first legal journal published in the Pacific Northwest. Today, the Law Review publishes Articles and Comments of national and regional interest four times per year. The Washington Law Review is entirely student-run. Students oversee the process from beginning to end — selecting articles for publication, editing and cite-checking them, and producing final page proofs for publication. They learn a great deal from this arrangement, and practicing lawyers and scholars benefit from the type of quality assurance that only a small army of devoted legal researchers can provide.
