Some law schools offer graduate work in a general field of law while others have graduate programs in a specific area of the law. A number of law schools have joint degree programs whereby a student may combine his/her legal studies with course work in another discipline. In these cases some of the credits from the law courses will count toward the graduate degree in the other discipline while some of the graduate work will fulfill a part of the law degree. When these programs are available the individual will generally be able to complete the two degrees in a year less than if they were taken separately. A large number of law schools give special emphasis to certain areas of the law but not enough work to warrant a graduate program.

The information on the following pages was compiled from a questionnaire submitted to the law schools by Dr. Gerald Wilson of Duke University and Dean Edward Stern of Boston University.* Again thanks are due to Ms. Terry Wilkerson, who shepherded this process from beginning to end, Mary Williams, Melissa Morad, and Leigh Harlan for their participation.

Many schools change their programs from one year to another. After finding the special program in which a student is interested, attention should be given to the most recent bulletin of that school. Several schools have indicated that a student might be able to work out another joint degree program on an individual basis.

* When there is an asterisk (*) beside a school, the information came from the Official Guide rather than from a response to the Stern/Wilson Survey.

D. AREAS OF EMPHASIS WITHOUT A GRADUATE DEGREE

Advisors and students should note that the primary function of law school curriculum is to offer a general education in law. In most cases, specialization in one area of the law comes with on the job experience after law school. Caution should be exercised in using this list of “Areas of Emphasis” as the primary factor in choosing a law school. Students should also be aware of the possibility that too narrow specialization may limit job opportunities.

This section of the Book of Law School Lists attempts to give a listing of areas in which clinical programs are offered. Given the great variety of clinical programs and the even greater variety of titles given to these programs, we believe that it is more useful to simply identify areas. Often these clinical programs assume the form of internships or externships. Specific details about each program can be found in individual law school bulletins or in The Official Guide To U.S. Law Schools published by LSAC/LSAS.

Two notes may be helpful to the reader:

First, where there is an asterisk (*) beside a school, the information came from The Official Guide rather than from a response to the Stern/Wilson survey.

Second, the list concludes with a category simply called “Various.” Resisting the temptation to label it “Miscellaneous,” the editors listed schools which indicate that they have clinical programs but did not offer specific information. In many of these cases, clinical programs are arranged individually according to the needs of the student and the opportunities available. Students and advisors should examine information provided individually by these schools.

Pro Bono Work Requirement/Public Service Requirement
Columbia University: Every candidate for a J.D. degree must devote 40 hours to public interest field work between the start of the second year of law school and the end of the third year as a prerequisite for graduation. Work will qualify if it is uncompensated (financially or by academic credit), public interest or public service law-related work, broadly defined and regardless of political orientation.

University of District of Columbia School of Law
Through Duke University’s Pro Bono Project, students provide volunteer legal services in individual areas of interest. While not required, participation is strongly encouraged.

Florida State does have a pro bono requirement. Students must fulfill 20 hours of pro bono/public service work during the second or third year of law school.

Georgetown University Law Center encourages students to participate in pro bono activities through the Pro Bono Challenge. Students who perform at least 75 hours of law-related pro bono work during their years at Georgetown are recognized at Graduation.

Georgia State University To encourage and support students who provide pro bono services to the community, the College of Law has adopted the Georgia State University College of Law Pro Bono Recognition Program. Pro bono activities include not only those that ensure adequate legal services for moderate and low income individuals but efforts that enhance the capacity of law and legal institutions to do justice, and activities in the local community that promote justice. The College of Law’s pro bono recognition program is designed to encouraged students to engage in such activities while in law school and thus conduct themselves in accordance with highest values and standards of the legal profession.

Gonzaga University will be implementing a pro bono requirement for students and faculty as of Fall 2000.

The University of Hawaii School of Law has a pro bono/public service requirement which requires all students to perform at least 60 hours of uncompensated public service work.

The Pro Bono Project at Indiana University School of Law—Bloomington is a cooperative program between the Law School and the bar and bench of the surrounding area to provide civil legal assistance to people who could not otherwise afford it. Students are assigned to work closely with volunteer lawyer on a wide variety of matters.

Indiana University—Indianapolis encourage pro bono’s involvement through a variety of placement opportunities ranging from community based agencies to governmental entities.

Loyola Law School—Los Angeles mandates 40 hours public service work beginning entering class of Fall 94 and thereafter.

The University of Louisville—Brandeis School of Law has a pro bono/public service requirement. After completion of their first year and before their final semester of law school, students must perform a minimum of 30 hours of uncompensated public service work. Institutional support is provided in the form of a half-time director and a half-time assistant who help students in meeting this requirement by having over 300 locations identified as well as assisting students in establishing other locations according to their individual interest.

University of Maine School of Law’s faculty has adopted a voluntary student pro bono legal service standard under which every student is encouraged to provide a minimum of 80 hours of pro bono legal service prior to the time of graduation. “Pro bono legal service” is defined as work involving the provision of legal services that is performed without either financial compensation or academic credit.

Examples include such work for legal services providers, individual lawyers providing pro bono service, social service agencies, low income organizations, civil rights organizations, environmental organizations, consumer organizations, and governmental agencies providing service to individual members of the public who are disadvantaged. Partisan political activity is not included in the definition of “pro bono legal services.” Students achieving 80 hours are recognized at graduation.

University of Maryland requires full-time day students to complete a public service requirement by taking one of a number of credit bearing courses in which students have substantial responsibility for providing legal assistance to poor persons or organizations representing the interest of poor persons. These courses:
a) provide students with an experience (including direct professional contact with poor persons) on how the law operates in practice; and
b) include regular classes in which the faculty member provides instruction that, when integrated with the practice experience, will help the students to understand, apply and critique theory and practice; and
c) have a professional responsibility component.

University of Nebraska seeks to encourage and recognize volunteer legal service by second and third year students through the Pro Bono Initiative. Students completing 40 hours or more of approved, qualified pro bono work during their second and/or third years will receive a Dean’s certificate upon graduation.

University of Nevada, Las Vegas—William S. Boyd School of Law requires first-year students to participate in a community service program in which teams of students, working with Clark County Legal Services and Nevada Legal Services, prepare and conduct weekly workshops for unrepresented people on basic procedures in family or small claims court and on basic landlord/tenant law and bankruptcy law.

Northeastern University: The School of Law is committed to the belief that all attorneys, regardless of the practitioner’s area of law, have a duty to serve the public. Therefore, all students must fulfill a public interest graduation requirement. Public interest under this rule is defined as employment or service with a government agency; a legal aid, legal services, public defender, victim advocate or similar agency; an organization or attorney advocating law reform or performing pro bono legal representation; or any placement where the dominant characteristic is service to underrepresented groups. Judicial internships and private firms operated for profit are not included in this definition. The requirement may be fulfilled in several ways, including completion of a public interest co-op or any one of the law school’s clinical courses.

The Nova Southeastern University Law Center Pro Bono Honor Program recognizes students who work pro bono for the public interest while enrolled in law school. Students completing a certain number of service hours will be awarded this graduation honor. The program is part of the Public Interest Law Center, which provides information and resources to students interested in working for the public interest and acknowledges that work. All students maintaining a minimum 2.0 GPA are eligible.

The University of Pennsylvania Law School has adopted a Public Service Program, which requires all students entering the J.D. Program to perform 35 hours of unpaid public service work over the course of their J.D. Program.

Roger Williams University School of Law—requires all students to complete 20 hours of volunteer community service over the course of their J.D. Program.

Rutgers University—Newark: The Pro Bono Program places students in a wide variety of public interest or public service law offices where students perform a minimum of 35 hours of service. The program is voluntary. Actually, more than 100 students (about 15% of the student body) participate.

University of South Carolina: Through the University of South Carolina’s Pro Bono Program, students provide volunteer legal services to a variety of projects and areas of interests. Participation is not required, but strongly encouraged and opportunities for service are readily available.

Southern Methodist University requires all students entering the J.D. Program in the Fall of 1993 or thereafter to complete 30 hours of work in approved law-related public service placements.

St. Thomas University will mandate law students to complete 40 hours of pro bono work as a requirement for graduation. It is designed to give second and third year students legal experience under the supervision of lawyers in a variety of non-profit offices, government agencies, and law firms. This requirement will be effective beginning with the academic year 2000–2001.

Stetson University: As a requirement for graduation, each student must complete 20 hours of public service between completion of the first semester of the second year of law school and the last day of classes of the semester prior to the student’s graduation.

Touro College: As a condition of graduation, every student must satisfy the Public Interest Law Perspective Requirement by successful completion of certain clinical programs or classroom courses or by certification of 40 hours of pro bono work.

Tulane Law School was the first in the country to institute a mandatory pro bono or a community service program. Since 1987, Tulane has required each graduating student to have performed at least 20 hours of supervised, 30 hours beginning in 2006, uncompensated legal work for clients who could not otherwise afford assistance.

Valparaiso University School of Law adopted a pro bono requirement in 1988. Valparaiso law students must perform 20 hours of legal service on behalf of indigents. The required hours are ungraded, but appear on the student’s transcript.

Western State University College of Law has a voluntary Public Service Program in which students use their legal skills to perform law-related work for the community and the underprivileged and are recognized for that work upon completing 40 hrs. of service.

William & Mary Law School: The Legal Skills Program is a mandatory, two-year program designed to teach students essential lawyering skills and ethical concepts through participation in simulated law firms. In these law firms, the students handle simulated cases from interviewing the client through trial and appeal. The Program requires that each law firm develop a pro bono policy for its student members to implement.

William Mitchell College of Law: Provides a wide variety of volunteer options through the Minnesota Justice Foundations. Students who serve 50 or more hours through MJF or clinics receive a transcript certification.

Washburn University School of Law: Washburn University School of Law Certificate programs include a public service component. First year students also meet public service requirements.

LAW SCHOOL PUBLICATIONS
OPEN TO STUDENT PARTICIPATION

This section of the Book of Law School Lists contains a summary of specialized law school publications open for student participation. Since the standard law review is a staple of law schools no separate listing was made.

In addition to the scholarly specialized publications listed in the next few pages, many law schools publish newspapers, newsletters and yearbooks. In most cases these are entirely student run.

As is the case with the listing of Clinical Programs, publications have been listed in categories rather than by specific name. Further information about these publications can be obtained by examining individual school bulletins or by consulting LSAC/LSDAS Official Guide To U.S. Law Schools. Where designated, by an asterisk (*) the information came from the Official Guide rather than a response to the Stern/Wilson survey.

B. SCHOOLS OFFERING A SUMMER CONDITIONAL ADMISSION PROGRAM

Only those schools responding to the Wilson/Stern Survey are included.

Appalachian School of Law  Must successfully complete 4-week program that includes one-week on campus.

Arizona State University College of Law  Two programs: Council of Legal Education; Pre-law Summer Institute @ UNM.

University of Baltimore  A 4 week summer conditional admission program. Students are required to take one class that inteweaves substantive issues with a writing component. Students do not receive credit for the class. Between 30 and 40 students participate based on perceived likelihood of success. Students admitted generally have lower than desired LSAT scores or GPA, but have either outstanding issues in their record or are minority applicants with strong GPAs. There is no special application procedure however, the applicant may request to be placed in the program. In order to matriculate in the fall, students must have a 70 average at the end of the program. The program incurs no cost to the student. The contact person for the program is Professor John Lynch, Jlynch@ubalt.edu.

Campbell Law School  Approximately 50–75 students are given the opportunity to participate in our seven week performance-based admission program (P BAP). The students take two courses of three credit hours each. A final exam is given in each course. A student who receives a “B” in both courses is automatically admitted to the fall program. Students who do not meet this criteria, but who demonstrate potential for success in law school, will be placed on a waiting list for the fall program.

University of Detroit Mercy  An 8 week summer conditional admission program. Students are required to take two classes, Legal Writing and Criminal Law. Students do not receive credit for the classes. Approximately 20 students generally participate. The Special Summer Program (SSP) is operated for minority, disadvantaged, or disabled applicants who do not meet the minimum standards of the entering class, but show potential for the study of law. SSP applicants must have at least one LSAT score in the 15th percentile. Question 13 of the application asks the applicant if he/she would like to be considered for the SSP. In a separate statement, applicants must describe the circumstances that qualify him/her for the SSP. In case of a disability, the applicant is requested to provide documentation. To be eligible for matriculation in the fall, students of the program must pass the substantive criminal law course, pass the legal research and writing course, and receive the unanimous evaluation of the SSP faculty. The cost of the program is $500 for tuition and $18 for parking. The contact person for the program is Kimberly Jones, Director of Recruitment, Admission and Student Affairs, joneski@udmercy.edu.

University of the District of Columbia

A 4 week summer conditional admission program. Required classes are Legal Writing, Reasoning and Analysis (class and tutorials); Torts and Criminal Law or Contracts. Students do not receive credit for the summer classes. Approximately 8 to 16 students participate. Criteria for admission into the program varies, usually the LSAT and/or GPA are below the “accepted” numerical standards or the student’s writing or organizational skills may be of concern and below what is deemed acceptable. There is no special application procedure. The student must attend every class and complete every assignment and exam in order to meet the condition of his or her admission into the fall class. At the end of the program each student is provided with an evaluation of his or her performance in the program; they are also counseled about their progress and about areas in which they may need to improve. If appropriate the program director recommends that students participate in the Academic Support Program. There is no cost to the student for participating in the program. The contact person for the program is Professor Derek Alphran, Director of the Summer Mason Enhancement Program for Academic Success (MEPAS); he can be reached at dalphran@udc.edu.

George Mason University

Hamline University

Must successfully complete 2 six-week courses.

University of Hawaii

Not summer but enrollment for up to one year as unclassified student taking selected first year courses and a special seminar.

Indiana University—Indianapolis

An 8 week summer program that selected students must participate in as a condition of admission. Continuation in the fall is not conditioned on their performance in the summer program. Students are required to take one course, a Legal Methods class with an emphasis on Legal Writing, for which they will receive 2 credits. Between 25-35 students generally participate in the program. Selection for the program is based on a variety of factors, for example unparallel indicators, out of school for a

Indiana University—Indianapolis

Number of years, English as a second language, or heavy science or math background with little writing. Applicants who wish to be considered for this program need to apply by February 1st instead of the normal deadline, March 1st. The program costs the rate of two credit hours, and typically nonresidents receive a scholarship. For more information contact the Office of Admissions.

Louisiana State University

Legal Methods course, successful completion, admission for Fall. Must have approval of Faculty Committee to enter summer program.

University of Louisville—Brandeis School of Law

Approximately 25 applicants are given the opportunity to participate in a six-week course (Monday through Thursday evenings) designed to enhance their skills in order to improve their chances for success in law school. All who complete the work in a satisfactory (effort and performance are evaluated) manner are allowed to enter law school in the fall. Most, if not all, of the participants successfully matriculate each fall.

Loyola—New Orleans

Michigan State University College of Law

We offer a program of approximately 20–25 students who participate in a 6-week course. Performance in the course determines whether a student is offered admission.

University of New Mexico

Yes, special attention to nonquantifiable factors in addition to LSAT and GPA. Successful completion allows students to continue into first year.

North Carolina Central University School of Law

Students selected to participate in the Performance–Based Admission Program (PBAP) spend two weeks in a classroom setting where they are given instruction in one substantive law course by experienced faculty members. Additionally, students learn basic skills: how to prepare for class; how to organize and outline course material; and how to answer legal questions. Applicants are evaluated through diagnostic testing, oral and written assignments and interviews. These evaluations determine whether the PBAP applicant will be admitted to the School of Law in the fall.

Nova Southeastern University

A 6 week summer conditional admission program. Students are required to take two classes, Criminal Procedure and Negotiable Instruments. Students do not receive credit for the classes. Approximately 150 students participate, subject to change yearly. The admissions committee invites selected students to participate. in the program. There is no special application procedure. In order for the student to matriculate into law school in the fall, the criteria is no grade below a C in either class and a GPA of 2.5. This year the program cost was $3250, this is also subject to change. The contact person for the program is Beth Hall, Assistant Dean for Admissions, hallb@nsu.law.nova.edu (954)262-6117

University of Oklahoma

An 8 week summer program for incoming students, who are already admitted into the fall semester. The program is for students that might not be fully prepared for the fall, and the summer session gives them and early start with a smaller class with more intensive instruction and a strong mentoring component. There will be two classes selected by the faculty from the required first year curriculum - five to seven hours. Students receive credit for the classes. The target number for the program is 20 students. Students must apply for the program, be selected for admission in the fall, and be selected for the program by the admissions committee. Students are already admitted into the fall class unless they drop out of the summer program, it is not a conditional program. The summer program is the standard tuition cost. For more information contact either Stanley L. Evans, Assistant Dean for Students at stanevans@ou.edu or Ms. Kathie Madden, admissions coordinator at kmadden@ou.edu.

Oklahoma City University

Two pass/fail courses—60 students.

St. John’s University

A 6 week summer conditional admission program. Students are required to take one class which varies from summer to summer. The class is always a first-year required course, last year it was Property, the year before it was Contracts. Students receive credit for the class, if they successfully complete the program by earning a B minus or better. Approximately 30 students participate each summer. Applicants need to request consideration for the Summer Institute no later than March 30th. Alternatively, an applicant may be invited to the program if their application is not otherwise admissible. In order to matriculate in the fall, students must earn a B minus or better in the course. The student pays only the cost of books. There is a required $750 deposit (the same as for all admits). If the student successfully completes the program this deposit is credited towards tuition, if not, the $750 is refunded to them. For more information contact either Robert M. Harrison, Assistant Dean for Admissions, harrisor@stjohns.edu, or Theresa McNerney, mcnernt1@stjohns.edu.

Saint Louis University

The Summer Institute at Saint Louis University is designed to indentify students who have experienced the effects of educational disadvantage. The Institute includes a substantive first semester course and a course in legal skills. The program lasts seven weeks, beginning in late May/early June and ending in mid-July. Students who successfully complete this program are accepted into the School of Law for the Fall semester. Limited to 25 students. Tuition and books are free.

St. Mary’s University
A 5 week summer conditional admission program. Students are required to take two classes, Logic & Writing and Analytical Skills. Between 15-20 students participate in the program. They are recommended by the Admissions Committee from the general applicant pool, and selected by the Program Director. There is no special application procedure. In order to matriculate into law school in the fall, the student must be recommended for admission by the professors conducting the summer program after completion. The cost of the program is $1500. The contact person is Professor John Teeter, jteeter@stmarytx.edu.

St. Thomas—Miami

Seattle University
7 week required attendance in the Alternative Admission Program. All students are considered full members of the entering class and guaranteed admission in fall.

Seton Hall University
For disadvantaged students, complete two classes satisfactorily and continue into first year.

University of South Dakota
A 6 week screening program which will yield 10 admits. Between 40-50 students participate in the program. Students are required to take two classes, Agency and Personal Property. Students are selected based on a completed file that is eligible to begin law school that fall; usually the only concern is in the numbers, either a low LSAT and/or GPA. Applicants cannot apply for the program; they are invited to participate after review of the law school application and supporting material. During the final week of the program, participants take an exam in each course, anonymously. the two exam scores are averaged, and those who have a minimum grade of 75 (mid-C) on EACH exam, AND whose scores rank in the top ten of the program are offered admission. The cost of the program is $950 plus books, and room & board. The contact person for the program is Jean Henriques, Admissions Officer, jhenriqu@usd.edu.
Syracuse University
A 3 week, summer program called Leo Education Opportunity Program (LEO) that is not a conditional admission program, but a program that provides and opportunity for students who may not have otherwise been offered admission. Students are required to take three classes, Introduction to Law and the Legal System, Legal Writing Workshop, and Legal Skills. Students do not receive credit for the classes. Between 20-30 students usually participate in the LEO program. Recognizing that numerical indicators are not always the best predictors of success in law school - even when considered in combination with other factors - the College of Law admits a limited number of students each year through the LEO program. There is no special application procedure. Students do not need to achieve set grades during this program, but need to successfully complete the program requirements and take an exam at the end of the three weeks. Tuition and housing costs are covered for all LEO participants during the summer program. The only costs to the students are books and food. For more information, contact either Nikki Laubenstein, Director of Admissions, aслаuben@law.syr.edu, Pamela Field, pjfield@law.syr.edu, or Keith sealing, kesealin@law.syr.edu.

Texas Southern University
Special attention to non-quantifiable factors in addition to LSAT and GPA. Successful completion allows students to continue into first year.

Texas Tech University
A 4 week summer conditional admission program. Required courses change from year to year. Students receive credit for the summer classes. Approximately 20-25 students participate in the program. The Admissions Committee decides which students will be considered for this program and those that will be accepted for the program. It is designed for those with lower academic indicators, but additional information in the file indicates the ability to succeed in law school. There is no special application procedure. If accepted for the summer program, they must attend the summer program to proceed to the fall. There is no required grade point average from the summer to proceed to the fall. The current tuition rate is $334 for Texas residents and $580 for non-residents. Students will pay the current tuition rate and all tuition generated fees. Since these rates change from year to year, the applicant should check the university website for current information. The contact person for the program is Terence L. Cook, Assistant Dean for Admissions and Recruitment, terence.cook@ttu.edu.

Texas Wesleyan University

Our Summer Enrichment Program offers 30 students this “leg-up” Program each year. They are allowed to matriculate in the Fall if they attend all classes and complete all assignments.

Thomas M. Cooley Law School

The Professional Exploration Program (PEP) is a 5–8 day intensive program given twice a year in June and October. This program is designed to give law school applicants who do not meet the minimum admissions requirements a chance to qualify for alternative admission. It also provides law school applicants the opportunity for self-exploration and discovery of strengths and weaknesses in their pursuit of a career. At the completion of the program, the students’ performance is evaluated by the PEP Committee. Students are notified by letter, three weeks after the program, as to the committee’s decision whether they’ve been offered admission to Thomas M. Cooley Law School.

Widener University

A 6 week summer conditional admission program. Students are required to take three classes. At the Delaware campus the required courses are: Torts, Civil Procedure and Legal Methods and at the Harrisburg Campus, the required courses are: Torts, Contracts and Legal Methods. Students do not receive credit for the classes. Student participation varies from year to year, but usually 60 to 80 participants at each campus. Criteria for admission is based on applicants who have displayed promise of success in legal studies even though they may have excelled in only one of the two principal standardized predictors of success - the Law School Admission Test and the undergraduate grade point average. The personal statement, letters of recommendation and all materials submitted in support of the application are considered. There is no special application procedure. Participants who obtain a 2.3 cumulative grade point average in the program are offered admission to the fall class. The cost of the program is $1500. the contact person for the program is Barbara Ayers, Assistant Dean for Admissions, blayars@mail.widener.edu, (302) 477-2162.

H. WHAT SCHOOLS DO WITH MULTIPLE LSAT SCORES

Only those schools responding to the Wilson/Stern Survey are included. Except as noted, the following schools have, in the past, averaged multiple LSAT scores.

University of Akron  May consider latest and/or highest score; generally scores are averaged.

University of Alabama  Currently using only the best score, but all scores are reviewed.

American University  If more than 8 points difference, use higher score.

Appalachian School of Law  Average of last 3 years.

University of Arizona  Most scores are averaged unless they are 10 points or more apart. If they are, we use the higher score.

Arizona State University College of Law  Multiple scores are averaged and the average is used in all reporting. Admission committee sees and review all scores.

University of Arkansas—Fayetteville  We take the highest of the final three scores.

Baylor University School of Law

Boston College

Boston University  Average the scores.

University of Baltimore  If more than 7 points apart and GPA is 3.0 plus, take highest.

Brooklyn Law School  The Committee on Admissions will see all reported scores and give substantial weight to the highest score.

University of Buffalo Law School  Most scores are averaged, but depend on individual situation.

University of California—Berkeley  Average

University of California—Davis  Multiple scores are averaged. Applicants may be contacted for written explanation if there is a significant increase or decrease in score.

University of California  Multiple scores are averaged.

_Hastings College of the Law_

University of California—Los Angeles  Average.

_California Western University School of Law_  Most recent if highest, otherwise averaged.

_Campbell University_  We generally average scores; however, we do consider each individual score and any explanation offered for the lower score.

_Capital University_  Will consider highest score; generally, for three or more scores, the average is used. Explanations for differences welcome.

_Catholic University_  Average. If there is a significant difference, the higher one may carry more weight.

University of Chicago Law School  We generally average scores; however we do consider each individual score and any explanation offered for the difference in multiple scores.

_Chicago-Kent Law School_  Depends on individual situation.

University of Cincinnati  Use highest score unless there is a significant difference between the two scores (6 points or more).

University of Connecticut  We review all scores. We do not use an index in admissions, as all application elements are reviewed. Only average scores when reporting enrolled class median to the ABA.

Cornell University  Consider highest score, but all scores reviewed. Explanations for differences are welcome.

_Creighton University_  Unless there is reason to discount one.

_Cumberland School of Law, Samford University_  Cumberland averages multiple test scores and welcomes explanation for significant differences in test scores.

University of Dayton  Average.

_DePaul University_  Multiple scores are average in most cases.

University of Detroit Mercy  We average the LSAT scores; however, we do look at each individual score and any explanation offered for lower score.

University of the District of Columbia School of Law
Consider highest score, but all scores are reviewed.

Drake University
Average scores. If there is a significant difference in scores, the higher score may be considered.

Duke University
Average scores. If there is a significant difference in scores, the higher score may be considered.

Duquesne University
First two scores not averaged.

Emory University
Average scores. If there is a significant difference in scores, the higher score may be considered.

Florida Coastal School of Law
Averages multiple LSAT scores.

Florida State University
Average.

University of Florida—Levin College of Law
Average, but review all scores.

Franklin Pierce Law Center
Unless second score is 6 points or more higher.

George Mason University
Average.

University of Georgia
Consideration given to each score.

Georgia State University
Consideration given to each score.

Georgetown University Law Center
If a serious discrepancy, more weight or higher score.

Golden Gate University
Average, but will review all scores.

Gonzaga University
Take the highest score as a general rule. However, spread of scores is considered.

University of Hawaii
We take the higher score.

Hofstra University
Take the average score.

University of Houston
Take the average unless the later score is ten points or more higher in which case the higher score is taken.

University of Idaho

More weight placed on higher score.

Indiana University—Bloomington

Scores are generally averaged. Consideration is given to large differential in scores.

Indiana University—Indianapolis

Take the highest score.

Lewis & Clark School of Law

Averages multiple LSAT scores.

John Marshall Law School

We tend to use the highest score.

University of Kentucky

Multiple scores are averaged in almost all cases.

J. PREFERRED MEANS OF RECEIVING LETTERS OF RECOMMENDATION

Each law school was asked to indicate its preferred means of receiving letters of recommendation. The four options listed below were offered. The list indicates preferences of schools responding.

1. We accept those letters of recommendation which have been processed through the Law Services Letters of Recommendation Services.

2. We prefer that students use the Law Services Letter of Recommendation Services but do accept letters directly from the recommender or the undergraduate institution’s credential service.

3. We prefer letters which come directly from the recommender or the undergraduate institution’s credential service but do accept letters from the Law Service Letter of Recommendation Service.

4. We have no preference.

L. SCHOOLS USING A FORMULA IN THE ADMISSIONS PROCESS

Only those schools responding to the Wilson/Stern Survey are included.

These schools indicated that a formula is used for pre-sorting and as an aid in determining the process for considering the file but not for determining the decision.

The specific formula used by a law school is provided in cases where that information is available.

<td>No goals or quotas are set, but an applicant's potential contribution to diversity is another consideration in determining which applicant's are selected for admission. This latter criterion necessarily involves an assessment of such factors as geographic origin; membership in a disadvantaged economic, racial or ethic group; personal interest and talents; special achievements; prior life experience; leadership qualities; and maturity. These elements reflect the Law School's concern that every applicant, regardless of age, sex, disability, race, color, religion, national or ethnic origin, sexual orientation, marital status or parental status, be given every reasonable chance for consideration and admission.</td>

The College of Law has long held that a diverse and heterogeneous study body leads to stimulating and exciting classroom discussion. To achieve this goal, the College of Law seeks to attract students from a variety of backgrounds and experiences, including students of color, students who have been educationally and economically disadvantaged, students who may be from particularly urban or rural backgrounds, and students from a wide and varied intellectual background. By maintaining and enhancing diversity in the student body, all students have the opportunity to learn from several different perspectives and, in the long run, improve their own capabilities as attorneys and upholders of justice.

We invite applicants to write an essay regarding their diversity factors which includes (but is not limited to) racial or ethnic group identification, cultural, linguistic, economic, sexual orientation, or other factors that are relevant to the admission process.

Drake Law School seeks a student population of many different experiences, opinions, backgrounds and cultures. The Law School considers many factors, including, but not limited to, minority race and national origin.

Yes we still consider diversity of cultural background and race, achievement, perseverance and accomplishment under adverse circumstances, reasons for attending law school, membership in group historically underrepresented in legal profession and potential for providing legal services to under-served segments of the population. These factors considered after candidate has demonstrated the requisite academic ability to succeed in law school.

Lewis and Clark School of Law

| n/a | $11,000.00-$13,000.00 | Yes |
| We strongly support a student body that is diverse with regard to cultural, ethnic, and socio-economic background, age, geography, life experiences, and other under-represented populations in the law school student body.

LOYOLA LAW SCHOOL, LOS ANGELES

| $18,272.00 | YES |
| We most certainly still consider diversity as an important factor in the admission process. Diversity includes educational and economic disadvantage, ethnic and cultural heritage, geographic origin, graduate and doctoral studies, rigorous academic studies, professional experience and unique circumstances.
